"On Paths to Meet Ourselves: Writing for English Courses"

By: Dr. Jennifer Lewin

At the end of this month, we'll be returning to the university classroom and thus to the work we love and have missed: reading, discussing, and writing about literary texts. After such a long and difficult delay, and under unprecedented circumstances, it's important to check in as a community, reaffirming our sense of the goals and skills of literary interpretation. Writing can be both joyful and stressful; this hour-long interactive workshop is designed to provide paths to succeed at self-expression in your assignments, address any concerns you may have, and allow real-time practice at writing about literature.

December 27 | 13:00

The event will take place in Rabin Building, Room
